Recess quality, not just the amount of time spent away from the classroom, plays a major role in whether children experience the full physical, mental and social-emotional benefits of recess, a new study shows. The findings underscore the need to increase recess time for kindergartners through second-graders. Middle-schoolers gain little from the brief recess breaks built into their schedule, the study found. In fact, some children's behavior can deteriorate, especially among children who have been in trouble for misbehavior.
