Seek to live in a way that you treat everyone you meet as you would yourself. Once you begin trying to do this, it will seem altogether impossible. But keep at it, and you'll realize the full power of living with compassion. 2. Connect with others and nurture those connections. In Buddhism, a community of practitioners is called a "sangha".

Living ethically is a foundation of Buddhism. It is part and parcel of training the mind and freeing ourselves from suffering. The Buddha teaches us to examine constantly whether or not what we think, do, and say causes harm to ourselves and others. By avoiding actions that cause harm, we can make serious headway toward waking up.

~~An introduction to Buddhist ethics – Buddhism for---~~

1. Not killing or causing harm to other living beings. This is the fundamental ethical principle for Buddhism, and all the other precepts are elaborations of this. The precept implies acting non-violently wherever possible, and many Buddhists are vegetarian for this reason. The positive counterpart of this precept is love. 2. Not taking the not-given.

As Joseph and Gail unpack the components of integrity—generosity, virtue, renunciation, wisdom, courage, patience, truthfulness, resoluteness, loving-kindness, and equanimity—we discover each is a step on a path that transports us to an empowered place of clarity, commitment, and, consequently, more joy.

~~Buddhist Ethics – The Wisdom Experience~~

Buddhism compares an ideal human life to a tree. Ethics is the root that gives secure grounding to the human life. Mental discipline is the trunk that symbolises its inner strength, single-pointed stability, and decisiveness. Wisdom is the sturdy branch from which flowers ethical perfection, cognitive awakening and final liberation.

In Sanskrit, they are called sila (discipline or ethical living, samadhi (concentration), and prajna (insight or wisdom). Together, they summarize the Buddha's fourth noble truth, the full path to enlightenment. Sila: Variousl translated as discipline, ethics, virtue, or morality, sila encompasses three aspects of the eightfold path: right speech, right action, and right livelihood. Living ethically and purely is both the ground of the Buddhist path and its result.
