The purpose of this study was to determine if the Reading A-Z or the Pearson guided reading programs are more effective. The study groups selected for this study were two groups of five students from the kindergarten class. Each group received guided reading instruction in just one program, either Reading A-Z or Pearson. After using only these programs each student was given the DRA-2 Assessment and their scores were compared to their scores on the DRA-2 in September. The analysis results indicated that there was a significant difference between the Reading A-Z and Pearson Guided reading programs as measured by the DRA-2 Assessment. By comparing the mean scores, the Reading A-Z was significantly better.
